

100 Women We Love 2014

June 14, 2014

Chrissy Carney, Kat Long, Gena Hymowech, Quinn Wonderling, and Shannon Leigh O'Neil

From professors, to musicians, to activists, we present to you 2014's 100 Women We Love.

Rachael Sage

In her own words, singer, songwriter and producer Rachael Sage's music is "at its essence, about transformation and overcoming obstacles." Her recently released EP, New Destination, encompasses this core message and redefines Sage's string-heavy alt-pop in a more adventurous, contemporary setting. Sage has been writing her melodic compositions since she was old enough to reach the piano keys, and has been out and proud since emerging on the New York music scene. She knew she was bisexual from the age of 12, when she didn't know a word for it existed. As a staunch LGBT advocate, Sage says, "I think the LGBT community reflects the most brave, beautiful, ambitious, creative and diverse qualities of our larger society. I am continually inspired by, and grateful for the work that has been done so that I can get up on a stage most places in the world and sing whatever is in my heart, freely. I hope I can keep helping to make that a reality in more and more of the world, in my own small way!" Sage will be performing during Pride at the RAW NYC "Panorama" showcase at the Cutting Room on June 27. -CC